Georgina "Gina" Pierce has come to London with her father from Texas and his alleged fortune. Devon Sheridan, Earl of Huntington, has come to London to find a heiress to wed. Their match is arranged and things seem to be going swimmingly: while Gina struggles with the strictures of society, Devon is enamored of his unexpected bride-to-be--and the wedding night ain't bad neither, if you know what I'm talking about.

I think Susan May Warren wrote 'Heiress' in a very believable way. Since there was so much sadness, the story felt very realistic. There were a lot of twists (some I expected) and the ending to 'Heiress' makes me really want to read 'Baroness' - book two in the 'Daughters of Fortune' series. I very much recommend 'Heiress'.
