The Revolution Will Not Be Televised by Gil Scott-Heron is the Trope Namer. In this musically accompanied poem Scott-Heron predicts that the revolution will not be broadcast on TV for you to enjoy from your lazy seat, but it will indeed be a real society changing revolt that is not to be taken lightly.

I will discuss the meaning of "The Revolution Will Not Be Televised" from the perspective of one who was actively involved in left-wing campus politics at the time the poem/song was released.
Matthew Daneman 's characterization of rejection seriously understates the beliefs, the desires and the anger that were operating at that time (understandable - he wasn't there to experience it).

The Revolution Will Not Be Televised is one of Scott-Heron's most famous songs, and indeed the phrase has become a quotable one on issues of social disquiet, cynicism and distrust of the media. It is basically an angry socio-political poem narrated by Scott-Heron, frenetically, over a delicious bass, fatback drums and funky flute backing.
